She is a member of the Knesset delegation to the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU) and the House-Knesset Parliamentary Friendship Group.

Born in 1972 in Israel, MK Rayten Marom lives in Jaffa with her husband and two children.

Before entering politics, she was a renowned media personality and TV host, as well as a senior partner at the prestigious Goldfarb Seligman Law Offices, Israel's third-largest law firm. MK Rayten served in the IDF and was discharged with the rank of sergeant. She graduated from the Yoram Loewenstein School for Performing Arts in 1997 and pursued a successful media career, acquiring an in-depth understanding of the field.

She later studied law, earning an LL.B from the Academic Center of Law and Science, and became an attorney, licensed by the Israeli Bar Association, in 2012. As a partner at Goldfarb Seligman, she gained significant experience representing the firm's clients before the High Court of Justice, the State Comptroller's Office, and the Companies Authority. She also mediated disputes in various fields, including commercial law, contract law, corporate law, and libel, among others. One of her most notable cases involved representing the families of ten pre-army youths who tragically drowned during a hike in the Negev, due to the Education Ministry's negligence. She fought for the families in court and obtained an unprecedented sum in civil damages (the criminal case is still pending).

As a legislator, MK Rayten is known for her passionate advocacy on behalf of the underprivileged, including people with disabilities, the elderly, and single parents. She was a key member of the Judicial Selection Committee, where she was instrumental in the nomination of two female Supreme Court justices and the first Muslim Supreme Court justice in Israel.
